There is a search box and it enables you to easily locate an item. However, to get more information about a selected item, you have to press the F4 key, which is a bit tedious. Furthermore, the available context menu allows you to hide or enable a process from the startup list, but you can only disable one item at a time. An alternative is to create a batch file that calls a selected program and specify an option with the Batch command, but there is no support for the optional parameters. Finally, there is a scheduled task manager that enables you to detect and edit the scheduled tasks that runs at the startup. It is nothing more than a simple reminder feature.
